THE CADET OFFICER

Leadership qualities are not inborn. The ability to lead and inspire others to follow is learned. Training, experience, and the acceptance of responsibility all contribute to the process of making a cadet officer. The cadet officer is a man of self discipline, a gentleman, a leader and most of all the man who is prepared for the future and its challenges. In the quest for the men to lead and guide, these men have been chosen for the characteristics they have for leadership.
