

The officers, headed by LTC Russell Dickerson, are the leaders of Camden Military Academy. With their positions go the responsibilities that only years of hard work can earn. They keep order in their respective barracks and look after the general welfare of their men. High esteem is held in attaining a commission, and duly so, for only the best of the corps are chosen as the leaders of the school. The administration puts great faith and trust in these officers for they feel that if the need arises, the officers can run the school without the help of the faculty. The officers take great pride in their individual units and in their school, and even after they are gone, the spirit of the C.M.A. officer will live on.
