

PRECISION, COLOR AND CONTROL

Color Guard members — Rick Faulkner, Preston Walter, Todd Parker, Jon Faulkner, and John Hill — advance the colors for parade formation.

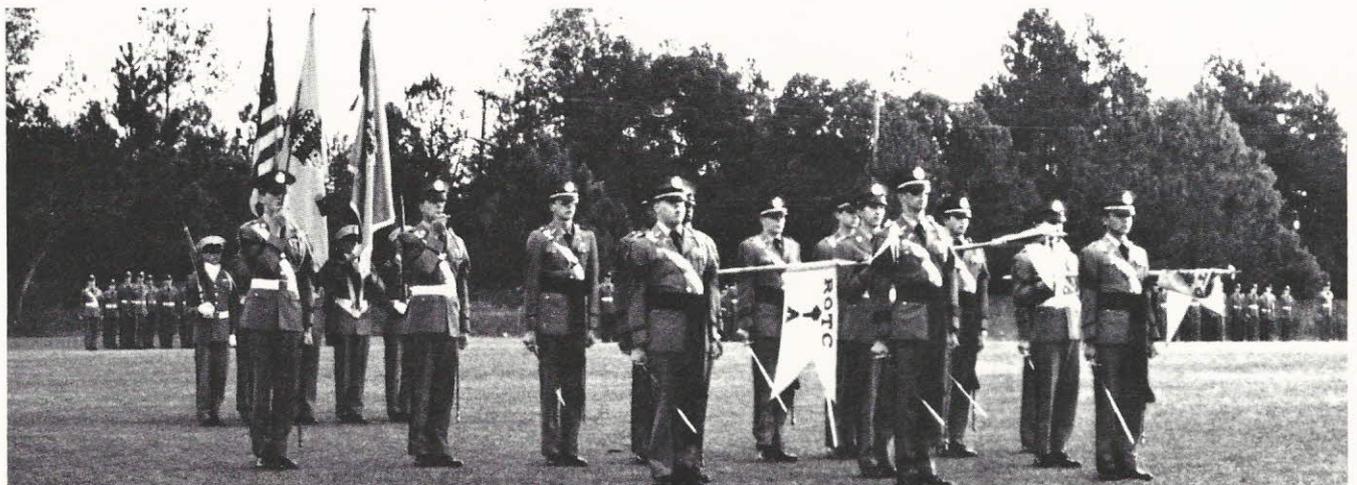

“Awesome” is the buzz word today to describe what was only “cool” yesterday, but past, present, or future, the cadet corps marching onto the parade field stirs the most blase watcher. Staff members, however, function more than ornamentally.

Cadets bear the United States, Camden Military Academy, and Carlisle Military School colors proudly. The James F. Risher Guard performs precision drill for special events, on campus and across the Carolinas, and in drill team competition.

Marching individually, in step to form squads, platoons, companies, and, finally, that entity of a rifle battalion, the same components are structure for student government and community. Step by step cadets develop the self-discipline to take orders and eventually to assume responsibility and earn authority to give them.

The James F. Risher Guard marches during the Camden Christmas Parade, Cadet LTC George Pagan in command.

“Officers Center” during Visitors Day parade.