The Fine Arts Club offers a chance for cadets to enjoy culture in their lives here at CMA. Club activities include visits to museums, art galleries, and historic sites, and attendance at lectures and talks by authorities on differing subjects. Cultural offerings in Columbia, Charlotte, and throughout this immediate geographic area open new worlds for many cadets in their stay here.

Published each Friday, The Adjutant keeps the corps informed on what's happened and what's going to happen at CMA. Publication is an informal process in which independent writers submit articles to Captain Lachicotte Zemp, newspaper adviser. He and his helpers put the paper together, print it, and distribute it after classes Friday afternoons.

Fifty-four scholars and churchmen worked seven years to produce the King James Bible. Although there's little basis for comparison with CMA's yearbook, Excalibur, it too is the work of a committee. Chris Bishop put the people section together, Damon Edmondson snapped the bulk of the candid photos, and senior English classes contributed copy which was edited and produced as committee prose. Major Burton Gale, adviser, prodded senior Honors Englishmen unmercifully and served as catalyst for the operation.
