

... on track.

Cadet life is like scheduled journeys that trains take. Cadets, however, have flexible life goals, trains only destinations to reach. It isn't easy keeping either one on track.

Some of us got sidetracked last year. Discipline was down and drug infractions and disregard for authority cost us heavily in lost leadership and in student numbers.

The battalion's now on track, but to keep it there takes direction. An expanded commandant staff is on board and has us rolling toward definite destinations, individually and as a corps. We're on track again, pulling together and looking out for one another. Morale's up and discipline's heightened. The system's go. We're back on track.
