

Polo and Planes (cont'd)

On the Camden tourist route is the Quaker Cemetery gravesite of Ellen of Glasgow, Revolutionary War figure who followed her soldier lover to the wilderness, but died before she found him. Pictured right (subsequent photos are clockwise) are JJ Campbell and Will Rice, foreground; leprechaun-like figure of Mark Herron and Gregg Marlatt, left rear: Eric Gadlage and Rob Whitmire, departing scene, right.

"Equine residue's the reason for the sign," explains Jon Felice (right) to the incredulous Mike Aaron, on the corner of Green and Fair Streets, part of Camden's "Gold Coast."

On a crisp October morning at Dusty Bend, Mark Herron, Gregg Marlatt, and Rob Whitmire head for a warm welcome at Wal-Mart.

Sunday school's coming up next for Ted Dailey, BJ Lathan, and Dana Lunsford, pictured after nine o'clock services at historic Bethesda Presbyterian Church, designed by Robert Mills, best known for his Washington Monument creation.

Broad and DeKalb Streets are the crossroads of Camden. JJ Campbell, Rob Whitmire, Mark Herron, Will Rice, Gregg Marlatt, Eric Gadlage, Mike Aaron, David Stepp, Jay Thurston, and Damon Edmondson disregard the traffic signal as they charge south on Broad.

