

The scribes

newspaper and yearbook staffers work hard

The Adjutant, a weekly newspaper, and Excalibur, the yearbook, chronicle events at Camden Military Academy.

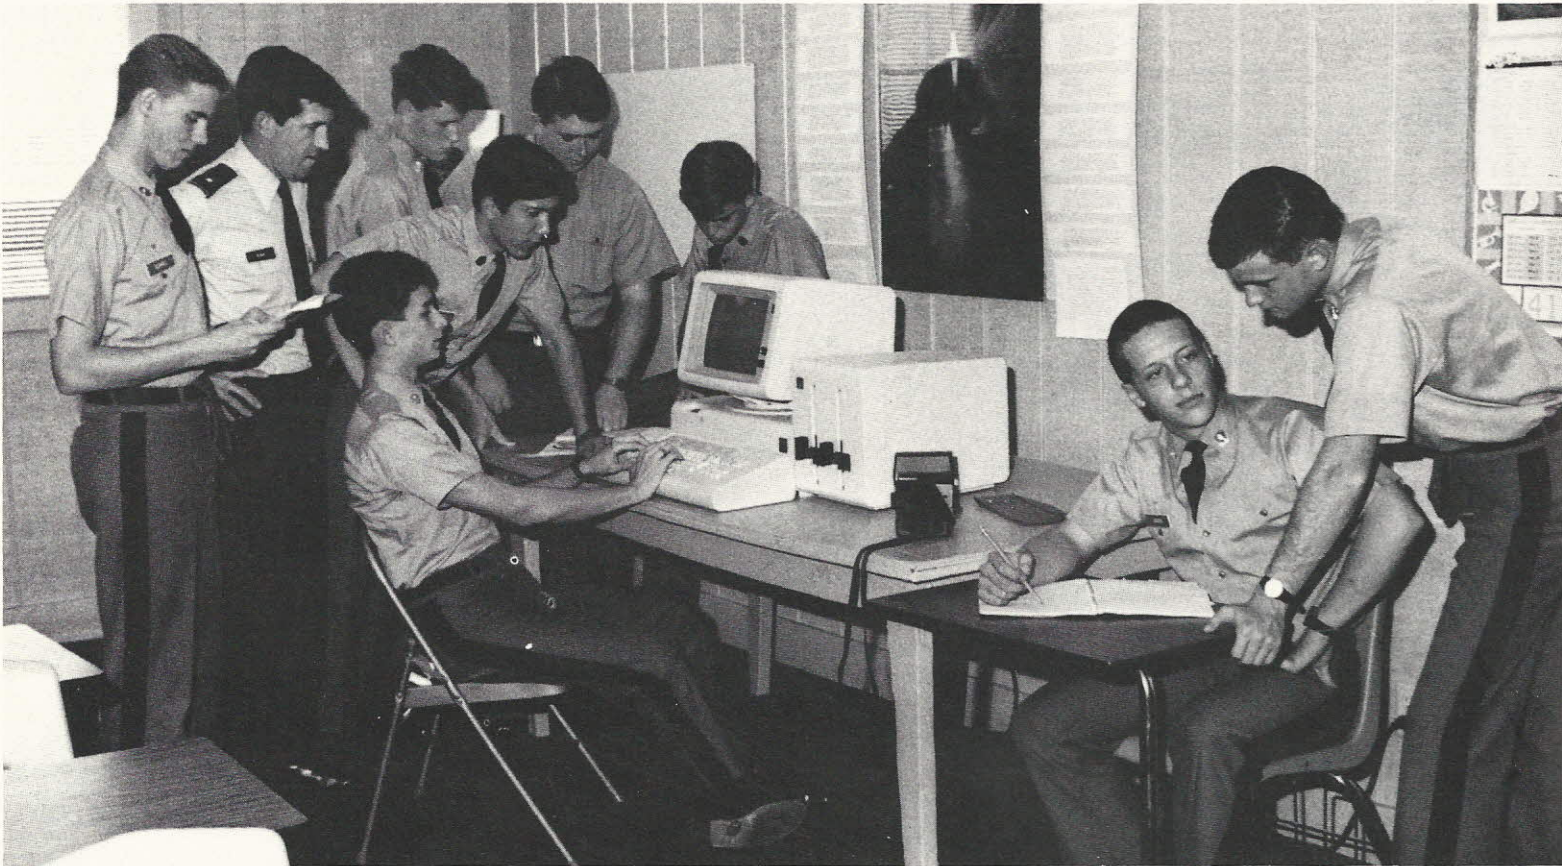

The Adjutant is a completely in-house publication, its catalyst Major Lachicotte Zemp, English teacher. Contributors are many, but the bulk of articles are from junior Honors English students. Cadets submit copy for Friday afternoon production, and publication and distribution are on Monday.

The newspaper effectively announces programmed school events and records happenings. Its stoic masthead Spartan undergoes metamorphoses on occasion to signal Thanksgiving, as a helmeted turkey, or Christmas, as an ancient Greek santa. The weekly "It's Trivia Time" challenges the quick-witted to submit answers to often probing questions, first to respond correctly, receiving a free coke and sandwich from Carlisle House canteen. The Adjutant keeps the corps informed.

The Excalibur emerges from Major Burton Gale's senior Honors English class. Lending support were Jon Felice, candid photographer, and Robby Mosier.

Yearbook copy is chiefly "committee prose," both the best portions and the gleanings of individuals' classroom assignments. Yearbook production is hard work, time-consuming and often thankless, but when cadets receive their annuals in May, providing a record of another year of Camden memories, the effort seems worthwhile.

The Adjutant Staff in action: Todd Scholl, Major Lachicotte Zemp, adviser, Scott Sperling (seated), Jim Mitchell, Michael Balducci, Kevin McDaniel, Mike Boiter, Douglas Eader, Matt Stokes.

Excalibur staff members check out amusing photos: David Stepp, Will Mitchell, Damon Edmondson, Gregg Marlatt, Eric Gadlage.

Fragmented group activity by yearbook staffers Jon Felice, Will Rice, JJ Campbell, Rob Whitmire, Major Burton Gale, adviser, Jay Thurston, Mike Aaron, Mark Herron.