

No cadet escapes it. From reveille to taps, our existence is regulated by, saturated with, military rules, customs, courtesies. Some love it, some hate it, most accept it as a part of their lives. But slowly, gradually, a feeling grows: a developing sense of confidence and accomplishment. The tough discipline and unreasonable demands begin to pay off. There begins to develop within us — for some of us in spite of ourselves — a feeling of pride.

Military Life