

Cadets at CMA learn and grow in many different ways. Although the classroom and the military regimen are intended as the primary means of development, other important avenues also lead to understanding and maturity. The little spare time that cadets have left after they have fulfilled the basic demands of school life is usually filled with additional opportunities for growth. Clubs and other organized activities add to the variety of experiences open to the young man who wants to get involved.

Here a group of cadets give up a Saturday afternoon to help clean up the debris left by Hugo at the home of Mrs. Christmas, the school nurse. Col. Eller, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Christmas, and Mrs. Eller are among the CMA family members who worked alongside this energetic crowd. Cadets (from left): Oppermann, Bryant, Gordon, Cosmopoulos, Way, Jones, Sealey, Watkins, Thomas, and Hyland.
