

Being sharp is being Military

The new review vehicle, the BDU's, and the Raider Team are all signs of CMA's continuing commitment to make the Corps of Cadets proud of their school and proud of themselves. Pride does not come easily. In the words of Cadet Battalion Commander Ian Osborne, people "must have self-discipline and respect for authority to succeed in life. Simply wanting to accomplish a goal is not enough." The military life at Camden Military Academy is intended to instill that discipline and that respect. It is intended to lead young men to a realization of their own worth and a sense of pride in their growing accomplishments.

Dressed in the new BDU's, 7th grader John Martin and other B Company cadets wait to march in to the mess hall.
