

The circle goes on

Year end brings thoughts of a new beginning

Admit it. Everyone looks forward to the end of the year. Not even the seniors love CMA so much that they would choose to return for another year. But for most of the rest of us, the end of the year stirs thoughts of what it will be like to return next year: with new rank, new responsibilities, new academic challenges, and, of course, new friends. The circle never ends; it just keeps expanding.

Colophon

The 1991 Excalibur was published by Walsworth Publishing Company. It had a press run of 275 copies. The cover is quarter-bound, Metallic Silver and Bluebell, with Navy silkscreen. The book is bound by Smyth sewing, with headbands. Trim size is 9x12; the 96 pages (plus 8-page supplement) are printed on #105 enamel gloss paper. The print is Palatino. Headlines are 48 and 30 point; copy is 10 point, captions are 8 point. School portraits were photographed by Bryn-Alan Studios. Other photographs were taken by cadet photographers Mike Worsham, Jamie Miller, Ian Osborne, Sierra Abbott, and Danny Current. Special thanks to cadets Paul Furr, Mike Worsham, and Jamie Miller for their extra efforts in helping with the publication of this book.

Preparing for next year, Admissions Director Gene McCaskill escorts a pair of prospective parents around campus.

It will soon be time again for new boys, weighed down after their first trip to the supply room, to head for their home away from home.

With only a brief glance back, seniors Ted Byerly and Paul Furr march toward their futures, while rising senior David Allen's smile seems to say, "See you next year!"
