

TAC OFFICERS AND CADETS WORK TOGETHER TO GET JOB DONE

THE MILITARY WAY

A military school, just as any other military post, can operate smoothly only so long as everyone follows the chain of command and carries his own weight. At CMA the military side begins with LTC Eller and his staff of tactical officers. CMA is fortunate to have a group of military veterans who not only know their jobs well but also genuinely care about the well being and total development of the young men in their charge. But all the tac officers can do is lead, by example and by command. Each cadet has a responsibility to himself and to all those who care about him to do the best job that he can, no matter how mundane or tedious the work may seem, so that he might master those tasks, learn those loyalties, and develop those blends of toughness and compassion that lead to manhood. From the clerks to the bugler to the Raider Team, every cadet has his job, and every job is important.

We hear our Bugler, SSG Steve Morris, from reveille to taps. Why does he sound so much better at night?
