Redefining Cadet Life

Sometimes it is quiet; sometimes it is raucous. But it is never dull. CMA cadets are too busy to get bored. From reveille to taps the day is filled—classes, drill, activities, sports, study hall—and finally, bed. We look forward to town leave, furloughs, vacations. They do not come often enough. We count the days; we go away; we come back and start all over again. Much sooner than we expect, the school term is over. If we have done well, we are pleased with ourselves. If we have not, we feel regret. Most of us learn to value our time, to use it productively. We carry away memories of friendships that will last a lifetime, of days well spent, and the satisfaction that comes with a job well done.

Ever the early birds, Mike Silva and Matt Provanca rush to class.
