

Educational Success

Since Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle, the relationship between teacher and pupil has been the single most important variable in educational success. Well-prepared, tenacious, and caring teachers always make the difference in sharing educational experiences with their pupils. Students willing to participate actively in their own education complete the basic needs for success. Here at CMA we are confident that our faculty fulfills one side of the process. At the same time we are proud that pupils, as cadets, grow every day in accepting their proper role in the search for educational success. Education is more than schooling; it is sharing life experiences and growing together as cadets and faculty.

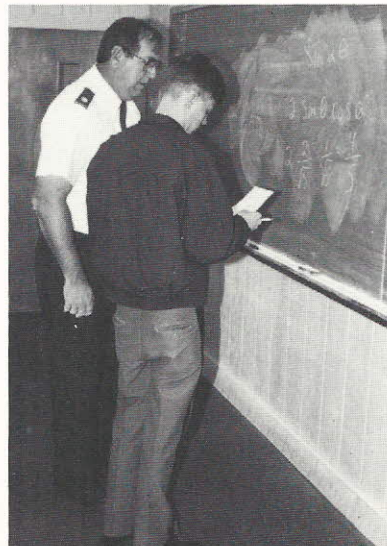

—LTC Kelly R. Schrader

Cadet Kevin Lancaster seeks advice from LTC Watson, social studies instructor.

During tutorial, Cadets McGeehan and Bryant get special attention from MAJ Dellinger, mathematics instructor.

LTC Roberts walks through a pre-calculus problem with senior Guerry McDaniel.

Cadet Wade Hicks explains principles of gravity during physics class demonstrations.

