

Honor in Achievement

At Camden Military Academy, we seek to mold the minds and character of our young gentlemen. It is not what we can teach them, but the principles with which we can inspire them. We hold high expectations for our cadets. This year we have seen our young men rise to unbelievable heights of performance. We have expected them to perform well and have supported them in their efforts to do well and to be better. We have provided them with large doses of English, mathematics, science, social studies and foreign language to form the core for a sound educational experience.

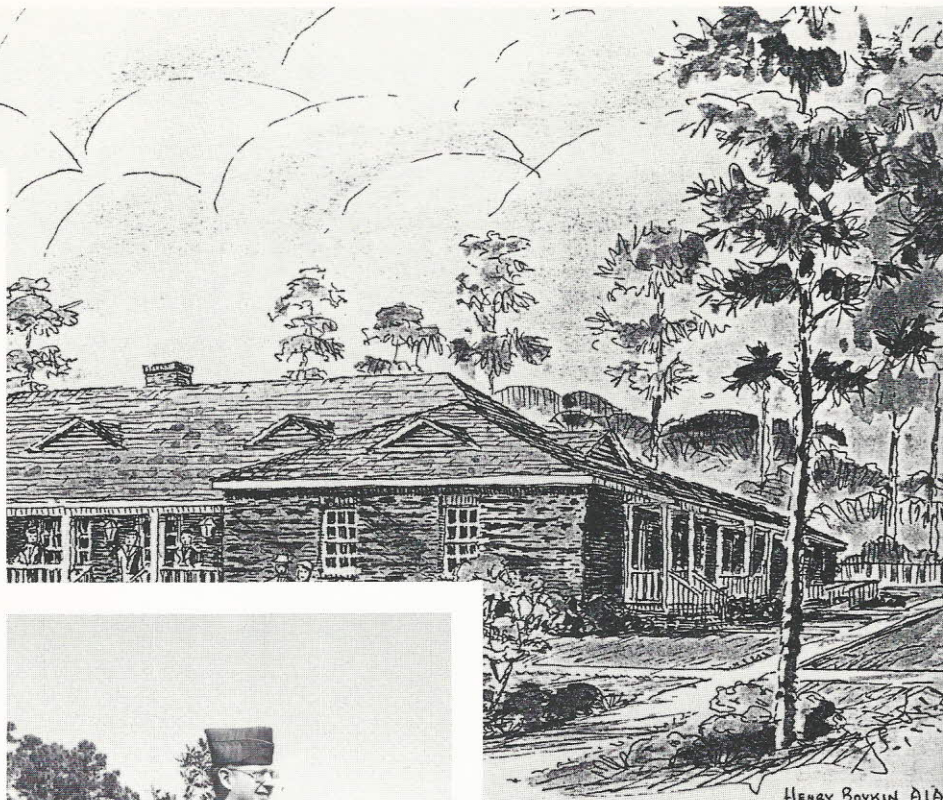

We have sought to improve this experience by increasing our standards and academic requirements. We have seen the addition of honors, advanced placement and other new courses this year. We have invigorated our institution with a stronger spirit of scholarly application and tradition. Many of our young men have accepted our challenges and have shown significant academic improvement.

We have sought to provide a safe and disciplined setting. We tend to stress character and personality development. Our small community promotes greater participation in sports and activities and a greater association with the fine men and women of our faculty. These factors and many more have given our young men a higher sense of self-esteem and greater control over their future.

We look forward to our next year, in which we will complete the construction of our administration building and renovation and improvements in our classrooms and barracks. We see the addition of more elective offerings. We see a stronger sense of personal development for our young men. We see a sense of cadet involvement and participation in our programs to the extent that each young man accepts responsibility for his own conduct and progress. We seek to help our young men understand the need for personal and professional excellence that are a part of men of character.

Thomas Jefferson remarked, "God grant that men of principle shall be our principal men." We pray that by our good works and example, our cadets, too, shall become men of principle.
