Honor in Sports

Sports celebrate the human body and temper the human spirit. The fight to the death in the woodland green has been taken to the playing field, where rules of honor prevail. We play hard, but we play fair. When we win, we do not gloat and strut, belittling our foe. We congratulate him for his hard play and sportsmanship. When we lose, we do not slink sullenly from the field. We salute our opponent for testing our strength, and we rise to fight again another day.

John Davis shows excellent form and concentration as he leaps high to launch his jump shot.
