Progressive Cadets

Challenges that are unique in this century face our young men as they move into the next millennium. How do we define and understand the meaning of honor in contemporary society? Has it ceased to mean loyalty, honesty, or devotion to principle? Do we have lower standards of conduct for people who hold high office than we do for ourselves or our neighbors? These are questions that CMA cadets must answer for themselves as they confront the hard choices that young men entering adulthood must make. Camden Military Academy will continue to teach that honesty, loyalty, courtesy, and charity are the most accurate measurements of manhood, tested principles by which we judge ourselves and others. Moral progress does not consist in abandoning high standards of conduct, but in living up to them.

As he did last year, the Reverend Brown inaugurated Black History Month. He emphasized America's debt to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and exhorted all cadets to use their God-given talents to the best of their abilities.
