People in the New Millennium

The leadership of Camden Military Academy has decided to make the Academy a 300 cadet institution by the next school term. Enrollment at this time already stands at 275; therefore, attaining the desired population is virtually assured. The Academy, however, will enroll only those students who possess the same good character that is typical of our present cadet corps and will add only those instructors and staff who meet our high standards. Growth in quality will be commensurate with the increase in physical size. Camden Military Academy is its people: a corps of young men with good potential and character and a caring and competent faculty and staff to guide them.

During a period of rapid growth in the CMA student population, Gene McCaskill, director of admissions, and Casey Robinson, assistant director, frequently find themselves at the computer. The Academy's enrollment is up over ten percent from last year and will increase by at least that much for the next school term.
