

Scarborough Barracks

Everyone watched the new barracks as it grew from foundation last year to completion and occupancy at the beginning of this school term. B Company cadets are the proud occupants of this attractive, spacious, comfortable structure that blends in perfectly with other campus architecture. At first, the building was known only as "The New Barracks." Then there was a growing acceptance of "B Company Barracks." On March 1, 2002, the Board of Trustees officially named the new structure in honor of Board Chairman Banks Scarborough. A Carlisle alumnus, Mr. Scarborough has for many years been a fervent supporter of Camden Military Academy. No one deserves this honor more. The most imposing interior feature of the building is the high, wide, well-lighted hall, which creates a sense of openness that banishes any trace of claustrophobia. CSM Rolf Irtenkauf, Tactical Officer, has tastefully decorated the public areas of the barracks. In the foyer stands a glass trophy case containing both military and sports awards, with Drill Team recognition predominating. Old and new photographs of B Company Platoons, as well as other inspirational pictures, align the walls of the hall. The computer room, like the living quarters occupied by cadets, is spacious and well lighted. All cadets appreciate the new utilities and privacy features in the bathrooms. CSM Irtenkauf and the chain of command under Company Commander Will Coltharp feel a particular sense of responsibility for maintaining the new structure. "CSM Irtenkauf rides us hard to keep this barracks in shape," said CPT Coltharp. The company has serious cleaning duties in the early morning and in the evening after dinner. They are determined to keep the new barracks new. B Company morale may well have benefited from the new environment. Beta won the Honor Company title first semester.

B Company forms on the parade field with the new barracks in the background.

CSM Rolf Irtenkauf discusses the Saturday Morning Inspection with CPT Will Coltharp, Company Commander, and SGT Stephen Burnette.

Cadets set the tone for a serious, quiet study hall by coming to attention outside their rooms and presenting their planners to the AOC for inspection.

Senior Mark Thompson controls his study environment by devising a seating arrangement that meets his comfort demands.