

A Position of Leadership

Camden Military Academy is in an enviable position among schools of its type in the United States. We opened this year with 300 students, the only secondary military school of our kind to begin the new academic year with full enrollment. Since the Academy has broad appeal among parents who want a military preparatory school education for their sons, we are clearly a leader in our field. Moreover, we have achieved our numbers without compromising our admissions standards. We continue to seek young men of good character who want academic help, and we have been successful in attracting them. We have a high optimism to continue this trend; however, the field is very competitive, and we must promote our school aggressively to maintain our position.

The Academy has kept competitive owing to three valuable assets: people, sports, and academics. In dedication and capability, our faculty and staff rival any others in schools of our type. Our sports programs are beginning to attract wide attention. We have won many titles in the major sports over the years, and this year in particular we have been superlative, with an undefeated football team and outstanding records in basketball and other sports. Our college preparatory curriculum is very attractive to parents. Although our diverse student body will pursue various opportunities after high school, we offer all of our students courses of study that will prepare them well to meet the challenges and demands of college.

Colonel William K. Orris, Headmaster

This has been a year of regrouping, of preparing for the next step. Our overall success as an academic institution gives us great cause for optimism, and we have definite plans for improving our physical plant and our academic programs. We intend to diversify our courses of study with additional electives, honors AP programs, and a broader computer curriculum.

Camden Military Academy has roots that extend over one hundred years into the past. We have proud academic, military, and athletic traditions. As we face the challenges of the present, we do so with a confidence founded upon our success as an institution that provides a quality education for young men.