Honor

Proof that Camden Military Academy's Honor Code works is that infractions have decreased significantly since the system was installed. Honor, however, extends far beyond refraining from cheating in the classroom. It means keeping one's word and valuing the reputation one earns for doing so. It means preparing for class and being on time. It means leaving the property of others alone and returning lost property to its rightful owner. Most especially it means always acting in a way that will uphold the reputation of one's school, one's family and oneself. Honor pervades every aspect of a man's life. It defines who he is. Preserving that honor can bring rewards that last beyond a lifetime. Losing it can bring everlasting shame.

It's that time again, the beginning of a new school year. Second Lieutenant Nathaniel Adjei of C Company instructs new cadets in the rudiments of drill before entering the dining hall.
