On October 22, 2005, CMA held its ninth annual Homecoming. This year's program included alumni awards presentations, a dedication, and the revelation of a generous benefactor's further contributions to CMA. After a parade honoring special guests, Colonel Boland presented the Camden Military Academy Service Award in absentia to Nick Unger Tucker (CMS '52) for rendering special and exceptional service to CMA. After the awards, everyone adjourned to the Cline Circle for the unveiling of the "Sword in the Stone," sculpture by Maria Kirby-Smith. Colonel Boland commended the late Mr. Ned Cline for his dedication to the values inscribed on the circle and the entire Cline family for their generous contributions to CMA. He also revealed that Mrs. Martha Cline, CMA parent, grandparent, and friend, is the benefactor for the new chapel. Colonel Boland stated that the chapel construction is the most exciting event of his twenty-plus years of service at the Academy. Mrs. Cline said that she was both "happy and humbled."
