

SMI

A Saturday Morning Inspection, or as it is more commonly known, SMI, can take up to an entire morning. Companies of cadets often prepare for this inspection the night before. On the day of the SMI, companies get up very early to complete the cleaning and to put the finishing touches on their barracks. When the SMI is conducted, it is done in two parts. First is the room inspection, taking up to an entire hour. Next, cadets form up outside to have their uniforms inspected. All this is directed by the Battalion Primary Staff.
