

SMI Saturday Morning Inspection

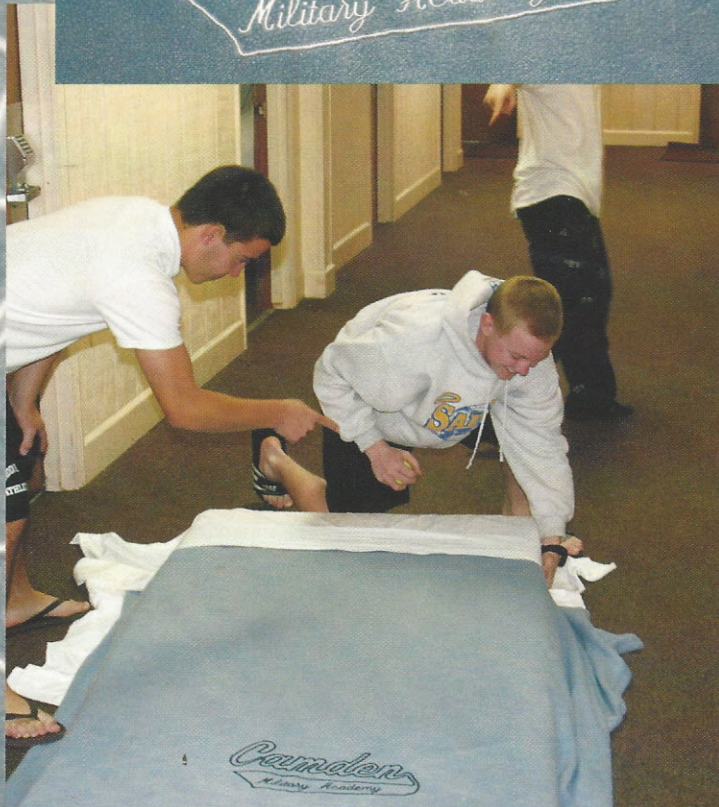

Cadet Leverett straightens his press.

Cadet Fleming adjusts his bed.

Cadet Martelly folds clothes properly in his footlocker.

Cadet Martin instructs Cadet Hogan on how to make a bed.

Cadet Haley perfects his hospital corners.

Platoon Sergeant Evans critiques Cadet Sosebee's press by adjusting the space between hangers.

Cadet Redal sweeps his room.

Platoon Leader Boyd conducts a detailed inspection of Cadet Lusk's uniform.

SMI, also known as Saturday Morning Inspection, is a tradition at Camden Military Academy. A typical SMI takes at least a day's preparation. Cadets prepare for the SMI by making sure their rooms are neat and "by the book." Barracks are also inspected, so a thorough cleaning is necessary. This ranges from vacuuming the hallways to scrubbing the bathrooms down. The cadets start the SMI by waking up early and checking that their uniforms are up to Academy standards. SMI is concluded when the Battalion Primary Staff has inspected the entire battalion.