Learning Inside and Outside the Classroom

At Camden Military Academy, academic opportunities abound both in the classroom and outside in extra-curricular activities which are nonetheless geared toward expanding the minds of students. In addition to ordinary state-required core classes Camden Military Academy offers a wide variety of electives and dual enrollment college courses. Among available electives are Art Appreciation, Photography, Drama, Journalism and Yearbook. The Academy also offers courses through the University of South Carolina in Lancaster. Such courses include the fields of history, philosophy, mathematics, psychology and English. As well as earning credit toward high school graduation, these courses also earn students undergraduate college credit hours. Outside the curriculum, academic opportunities are also made available through clubs and organizations. This year, for example, Captain Thompson has formed a creative writing club. He is also in charge of The Cadet, the school's literary magazine to which all cadets are invited to submit both written and graphic art. Cadets are also able to participate in the school's debate program. This year, after more than 20 years, Captain Wright has resurrected the CMA Debate Team and has already scheduled cadets for competition against other schools. In addition, cadets can learn about and participate in archaeology with the Camden Military Academy Archaeological Society, headed by Major Ghaffar. In this group, cadets learn the basics of anthropology and are able to participate in actual excavations of historic and prehistoric sites.

"The academics at CMA are very rigorous and demand a lot from each cadet. The classes have very small numbers of cadets, allowing the teachers to thoroughly explain each topic and to answer any questions that a cadet has. CMA's academics are preparing me and others for the realworld."
Nick Schulkin, Larkspur, California.

"Academics here at CMA go beyond the classroom. It's a lifestyle here to have the best academic success you possibly can. Compared to a public school, the classes are much quicker, and we can get more one-on-one tutoring if you have any questions. Academics here are easier because we have a two hour study hall, which forces us to study and do our work each night." Kody Kamina, Chapin South Carolina
