

I, for one, don't believe that the classes at Camden Military Academy are any easier than any other school, they just make it hard to fail. With class sizes averaging around ten students per class it gives us a great opportunity to work with the teachers on any problem we may have, and they are always happy to help. We also are given a tutorial period each day when we can go to any teacher and get extra help. We also have a mandatory study hall in our barracks from seven 'o' clock until nine, with a teacher here to help us with our work, which means there is no excuse to not do the homework assigned for that night. The different variety of classes that we are offered gives the student a chance to study just about whatever his interests may be. I've taken classes here that fit my interests that wouldn't have been offered anywhere else. Also with the extra help it makes it just about impossible to fail, something that has helped me tremendously on getting through high school with the grades I need to go to the college of my choosing. Eleventh and twelfth graders are also offered the opportunity to take dual enrollment classes through the University of South Carolina - Lancaster. This means we take regular college classes, but receive a full high school credit for the class and also college credit hours. This gives students the chance to either get caught back up to where they need to be if they're behind and to also get ahead for their college career. I will have taken six of these dual enrollment classes by the end of the year and will have completed my first semester of college in doing so. This benefits students by not having to pay for those classes in college and getting them out of the way and also by giving them experience into what their college classes will be like.

Sanders Forrester, of High Point, North Carolina.

Education will always be the priority at Camden Military Academy. Complemented by military training, the academic environment at CMA has a bonus component to instill discipline and to control use of time. The Academy is constantly fine tuning its academic program to meet the needs of all students.

