

"We have reached a milestone in our young lives; that of graduating from high school. Friendships made over the past few years will be difficult to maintain as we go our separate ways. Some will go to college, some into service, some into the world of business.

Whatever course our lives may take, we will have a common bond. The lessons that we learned here together will stand us in good stead wherever we are. To treat your fellow man squarely and to prepare yourself to take advantage of the opportunities life offers are rules for success regardless of our station in life."
