

SENIOR CLASS PROPHECY (Continued)

After completing our trip through the Athletic Buildings, we took a taxi to the Science Building. To our surprise the taxi was being driven by John Dobson. When we arrived there we were met by our old classmate Thad Toomer who was now Director of the Science Department. He informed us that we should be quiet because Dr. John Carlisle was working on his "theory of relativity" and he didn't like to be disturbed. Also associated with the Science Department were Profs. Stewart Myers and Dr. Bob Paulsen. We wanted to enter the Biology room, but it was in the process of being painted by Bobby Timmons and his assistant Don Coffelt, so we decided to resume our tour of the campus.

This time we chartered a super-sonic plane from the Douglas Spink Airways Service in Bamberg, it was then that we were informed by the pilot Tony Cruit, that Bamberg was now the third largest metropolis in the world. While flying through the clouds we noticed the magnificent new Olin Lewis Memorial Athletic Field, named after our former classmate and Carlisle's famous head basketball coach. Our first stop after landing was the enormous new Carlisle Cathedral. There the cadets of all denominations were presided over by the Right Reverend Robert Clayton Lewis. Pee Wee told us that Richard Gillard and Jim Hicks were his assistant pastors. We were momentarily disturbed by the sound of electric saws and atomic powered hammers. To our amazement these devices were being controlled by our Alma Mater's new maintenance engineer Maj. Robert Hunt. We greeted each other and he informed us that we ought to take the "Rocket Subway" towards the school shopping center. Another surprise came to us when we learned that Pete Crolley was the subway conductor. After the subway stopped and we stepped on to the platform, and started walking a strange character advanced towards us and tried to sell us a genuine diamond ring for twenty dollars. On looking twice we discovered that the anonymous huckster was economical Abie Saks, trying to make an honest living. After re-newing acquaintances and buying the genuine "dime one", we took the robot controlled elevators to the upper level on the highway. Strolling down the avenue we were attracted by a large fluorescent sign advertising the Double-T Radio Shop which was owned and operated by Richard Travis and Hugh Thomas. Here we were told that Jimmie Gaines had just opened his new 25 story, million dollar funeral home. When we again arrived in the streets we noticed a stupendous bill board announcing the arrival of Dick Wilkinson's "World of Merriment Carnival". Heading his review were the talented "Cuban Bombshells", Jenaro "Cugats" Gutierrez and Renaldo Sanchez. Right below the sign was the "Ape" Deeter Sanitary Barber Shop. Then for a moment we were blinded by the sublime Leon Castles Motion Picture Colosseum. The production on the screen was "The Torrid Love Life of Mary Nell" starring Brooks Mikell. Just to break the monotony we decided to take the "Missing Article Steamship" owned by John Newton—on our way back to the Administrative office. On the liner we met Johnny McTeer and Johnny Doyle who had just returned from an entertainment tour of the continent. We then discovered that Dick Wuersch was secretary to Maj. Tom Echols, now dean of Wofford College. After saying good-bye to Lanning and John C. we started on our long way home. Glancing back at the school we noticed a light shining in the dark night. Out of curiosity we went back to the barracks to see who it was. Upon arriving we found out that it was Don Davis, Jr., and "Mack" Sineath, Jr., preparing the prophecy for the 5000 page 1965 annual. In departing we, the writers, say that we hope they have more luck than we did.
