

FOREWORD

The day approaches that our class will be added to the long grey line of men who graduate from Carlisle. Each day, as we gaze at the familiar buildings and on familiar faces of faculty and fellow cadets, we can reflect on those many little incidents in which they were involved, which collectively compose our impressions of our life here.

In the future, when familiar scenes and faces have faded into the dim and distant past, it is our hope that our edition of the REBEL will bring them once more effectively to mind. If this is accomplished, our labors will not have been in vain.

Sincerely yours,
The REBEL Staff.
