
We, the members of this year's REBEL staff, would like to take this small portion of time and space to say a few things which we feel would be appropriate.

To start with, we would like to extend our hardest thanks and appreciation toward all those fine persons who have contributed to the tedious labor involved in publishing and making this REBEL of 1967, the best for all of you, and above all the best yet. From the workers, typists, photographers, managers, and editors on up, we thank you all from the bottoms of our hearts.

And while you thumb through this yearbook, especially you seniors, we hope we have brought to your eyes and hearts all the fond memories you have experienced here at Carlisle. Though it seemed at the time, to be mostly hardships and grief, now that it is nearing its ultimate end, you most probably will look back on it all and realize that Carlisle has meant a great deal to you, and you will have that feeling of regret, that I, myself am sure every graduate before us and every man to graduate from this institution from here on, has had and will have, that you actually have enjoyed every wonderful moment here and you kind of hate to leave.

Taking into consideration that most of us will never see each other again, we would like to wish you every one, the very best of luck in the type of life and career that you choose to be your own. We feel certain that all your endeavors will and must be successful.

On behalf of the 1967 REBEL staff, I would sincerely like to say . . . God bless you and may luck go with you all.
