

Carlisle —

Outfitting a late arrival at the school's new quarters.

As is becoming increasingly evident each day, Carlisle has evolved into pretty much of a little city within itself — a micropolis, so to speak, with everything from hotdogs to haircuts within a pebble's fling of everything else.

The changes and improvements which have been made within the past year or so were, as always, trifocal in purpose: To make Carlisle an even better school; in so doing, to make the school a home; and, above all, to give both aims first priority. Students learn what they live, and live what they learn; consequently, a home is, in the end, every man's Carlisle's new coin-operated washers and dryers are available seven days a week.

The school's new drycleaning service is a welcomed convenience to all.

Livin' the good life without gettin' fat . . . well, obese, at any rate.
