

A Micropolis

first and final classroom and teacher. It is not enough, to be a school away from home; Carlisle strives to be a home within a school.

An intellectual climate in which any one of the three basic elements of home, school and church is absent, is as lifeless as would be an actual physical climate lacking any one of the vital necessities of sustenance, sunlight or air. It is Carlisle's purpose that cadets be exposed to just those conditions which develop them in mind, body and spirit. A city owes its citizens no less.

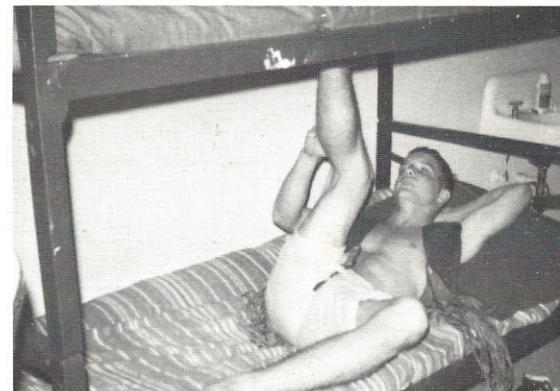

Cadets lounge in the school's beautiful new canteen.

The place already gleams, but Ben shines on.

Of course, some sections of our city aren't so groovy — the shot section, for example . . .

but we manage to make ourselves at home — right, Bitsy?

