A select group of cadets, the Training Cadre is chosen by the Senior Army Instructors. It is their job to train the new cadets entering the school each year.

The length of the training period depends, naturally, on how fast the new cadets can learn. It begins two days before the old boys arrive, and ends approximately six weeks later. The Training Cadre came into existence in 1956, and has proven to be a valuable organization within the school.

Once the training period has ended, the new cadets are assigned to companies and given new roommates.

The REBEL would like to pay tribute to the men who gave their time to these new boys in order to teach them the basics of cadet life.
