

Mo Money, Mo Problems

What's it Worth?

Here kid, take this shiny nickel. That was how a majority of the students with jobs felt after they recieved their paychecks. Being a student and having a job proved to be a task. There were so many things to buy and so little money to spend on the things wanted. "I don't see how it is that you can go into a gas station and spend half of your paycheck, but it's possible because it's a weekly occurance with me," senior Brad Peurifoy said.

Eating out during the week, after school and on the weekends really drained the cash as well. "Whenever I make my daily trip to Wendy's after school, I have to order a water instead of a coke because of my lack of funds," sophomore John Self said.

Some students actually used their money in a positive way. "I spend my money on things such as the church and helping my mother with things that we need," junior Brandon Williams said.

Money was known to divide families and break up friendships. "People are not supposed to always ask others for money. Goldiggers should try getting a job," sophomore Alicia Ellis said.

The joys and sorrows of money were found throughout the high school every day. Money was the root of all evil since the beggining of common currency.

In a hurry? After eating, junior Sybil Hiers stops to talk to some friends. Students hung out at McDonald's after school daily. "During the week, I spend money on eating out with my friends," Sybil said.

Time equals money. On her way home from school junior Caroline Sauter calls her friends on her cell phone to see what is going on. Cell phone bills were a problem for many of the students. "My phone bill is usually pretty high, but I have a job to help pay my bill," Caroline said.

Where's the money? Freshmen Timothy Kelly and Kelvin Mitchell look for the office where you pay fees. The boys spent money at the school everyday. They bought temporary I.D.'s or drink from the cantine regularly.
