

Following the Golden Rule

Treating others the way I want to be treated

"I've lived my life to learn, and in this amount of time I've realized the importance of goodness," senior Jason Vaughn said. "Believing that the bigger effort someone makes to improve life for others, the better their life will be" is the motto Jason lived his life by. "Many of my beliefs are supported by my Christianity," Jason said.

In a different case, junior Shelley Stephens helped people of the effect it might have on them in later life. "If I am helping someone and they do not want to discuss the situation, then I will pull them away from the crowd," Shelley said.

Sophomore Leah Ellison visits the nursing home whenever she gets the chance. "It's amazing how the company of another person can bring such a beautiful smile to their face," Leah said.

It was once said that a helpful and willing person does not notice that they went unrecognized for their good deeds. It only bothered them when they failed to recognize others.

-Maegan Causey

Study time. In the library during third period, juniors Jade Abudia and Taylor Smith, spent their time looking up information for their research paper. The two students took a breif second to discuss the paper.

An apple a day. Looking up a student's class for Mr. Locklair, senior Dianne Brown helps out during fourth period. "I try to help Mr. Locklair out as much as possible," Dianne said.

Listen up. While standing in the hallway, junior Dana Garrett gives sophomore Lauren Moody advice. The two discussed the moves to a cheer they had just learned.