

Sometimes it is easier to pretend to be someone else than it is to be yourself.
-Unknown

"I like the play 'Voices from Washington High' because I think it was a good example of how high school works today."

Kyle Thomas, 12th

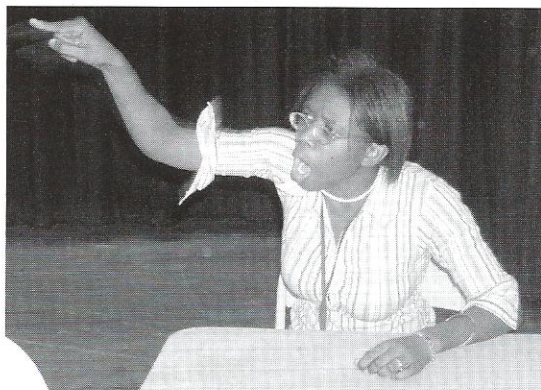

"I liked teaching Drama because I think the class gave talented students the opportunity to shine."

Drama teacher Mrs. Garitt

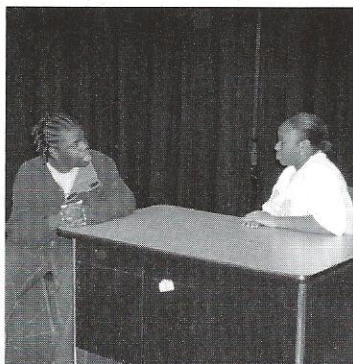

"Drama class really helped me because I used to be quiet and shy, but now I have more confidence in myself."

sophomore Matthew Porter

Pointing her finger with rage, senior Courtney Colleton's character, a mom, expresses her anger. Even though Courtney did not take drama, she still volunteered to help out with the play. "Being in drama gave me the opportunity to express myself," Courtney said.

Getting into character, junior Will Robbins takes his anger out on sophomore Savannah Lane. Drama provided students with the opportunity to fully express themselves. "My favorite thing about drama was the fact that I got to be loud and have fun at the same time," Savannah said.

Discussing their scene, juniors Jessica Ford and Anita Getters practice until they get it just right. Performing became a new challenge for many students. "This was my first play, and I just wanted to concentrate and stay focused," Jessica said.

Working behind the scenes, sophomore Kayla Souza makes some last minute adjustments to the equipment used in the play. "Even though I didn't perform, I had an important part working backstage," Kayla said.

