

Concentrating on her arm motions, freshman Callie O'Connor practices before a JV game. "We always practiced before games to make sure we knew what we have to do," Callie said.

Working hard to perfect her cheering, sophomore Emily Blakenship reviews a stunt with the rest of the junior varsity cheerleaders. "I loved all the girls on my squad; they were all very sweet and I knew I could ask any of them for anything," Emily said.

Putting in a little extra effort, sophomore Jaime Johnson learns a new cheer. "I liked learning new cheers especially if it was a cheer I can get into," Jaime said.

Taking a little time to relax, sophomore Taiessa Andrews stops to take a silly team picture. "I think this year went really well as far as cheering went, and we all got along great," Taiessa said.

Stopping for a quick snapshot, freshman Tori Brown and sophomore Stephanie Castles flash big smiles. "The rest of the girls made cheerleading lots of fun, there was never a dull moment," Tori said.

SCREAM FOR YOUR TEAM

The Junior Varsity Cheerleaders helped pump up the football players. Cheerleading proved to be more than just skirts, smiles, and pep. Sometimes cheerleading required a little blood, sweat, and tears. "Lots of work went into cheerleading that no one really thought about," sophomore Stephanie Castles said.

The cheerleaders practiced during the week after school. They worked on stunts, dances, cheers, and jumps, and they gave their all in everything they did. The girls showed their dedication by being at every practice and never once missing a game. "I sacrificed a lot to be there and make things happen," sophomore Prenita Hudson said. Cheerleading challenged the girls, but it kept the team's spirit alive.
