

THE GRAND SLAM

Former junior Drue Davis rears back to pitch the ball back to his teammate. "I enjoyed playing baseball for the Cougars. All the players worked hard and so did the coaches," Drue said.

THREE STRIKES, YOU'RE OUT

Varsity baseball proved to be important to the players as well as the coaches. The demanding nature of the sport required constant dedication to play successfully. "Each player put a lot of effort into the game, and without all of us, winning would have been harder," former senior Larry Richerson said.

Some students hoped to go pro, a popular dream among high school athletes. "I'm hoping to be seen by a scout and maybe do something with my life," sophomore Justin Reeves said. This year the team tried their hardest to be successful.

"Baseball was a difficult sport because I had to be watching ten different things at the same time," former senior Travis Adams said.

The baseball team gather before their game for a quick prayer to help boost their spirits. Some of the players thought that praying helped to relieve some of their nervousness.
