Free Time Anyone?

Between Classes

Students at Colleton County High have always enjoyed breaking between each class. The students had so many options in their six minute time frame; hitting the bathroom, dashing to their next period, getting the Reader's Digest version of the latest gossip, or some daring students would brave the line at the canteen. "I go straight to class because I don't really see many of my friends in the hallway," said junior William Reese. Considering all of the options, many students did not feel they were allowed enough time between classes to do all the things they needed to do. "I think we should have more time between classes because some people that do have a locker can't go from the gym to the freshman academy and use the restroom and make it to class on time," said senior Andrew Harvey-Jones. Although many students felt this way, free time between classes could have been considered a privilege to the students at CCHS.

1. Senior Janelle Drown went to her locker in between classes to put her first period books away. "I like where my locker is located because it is not too crowded," Janelle said.

2. Senior Danielle Campell walked out of the bathroom right after she used the restroom between classes. "I talk to my friends between classes because I love to gossip," Danielle said.

3. Junior Tillotson Gadson chatted with Danielle Campell before he returned back to his third period class. "I go to my locker between classes and I like where it's located because it's next to Melanie Coulter's," Tillotson said.

4. Junior William Reese stapled his math test together before he turned it in. "I visit the drink machines between class and either get a Coke or Mt. Dew," William said.

5. Coach Adams shook freshmen Tyren Kears's hand because he had his shirt tucked in for the first time. "When I am late to class it's because my shirt tail is untucked, so teachers stop me and make me tuck it in," Tyren said.

6. Senior Melanie Coulter got her books before going to English class for Mrs. Atkinson. "Nothing embarrassing has happened to me between classes but I did hit Tillotson Gadson with my locker and gave him a black eye," Melanie said.
