

Cameron Cooper

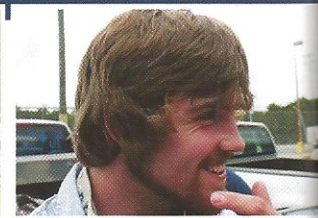

Lauren McCollum and Krystina Robinson

Seniors socializing

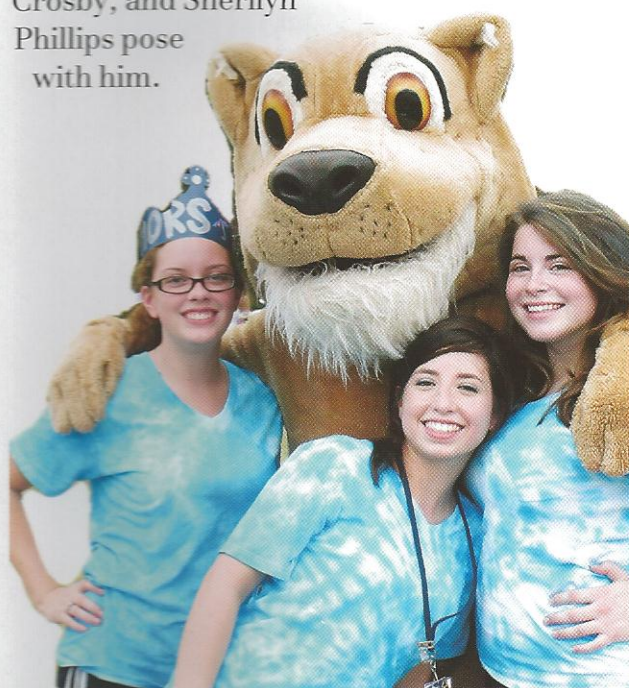

Shakera Nesmith

Cody Cobble

Freddie the Cougar came out and took pictures with the Seniors. Here, (from left) Taylor Fox, Anna Crosby, and Sherilyn Phillips pose with him.

"Only 47 more years until we're seniors again." - Anonymous

It all began in 2003, when Doug Bullock decided to start something for the seniors, Senior Tailgate. The day of the Homecoming game, eligible students of the senior class, got out of school and went down to the track where they could park their cars. The seniors were allowed to cook out and just hang out with each other, spending one of their final moments at CCHS together. All senior students look forward to this time, though this year one senior was not able to attend. His name is Robert Glover. Robert has been diagnosed with leukemia and was not able to attend his Senior Tailgate. He was greatly missed as all of the seniors felt the lack of his presence. "We all came to the middle of the field to bless the food and to recognize Robert and to let the whole class know about what is going on with him. We also recognized him at the pep rally and the football game. Everywhere we go everyone is going to be thinking of him." Hillary Clegg stated. The senior class is supporting him and hoping for him to overcome this challenge in his life. A few students even decorated shirts in orange, the color for leukemia, for the game Friday night to show their support.

Sierra Tippins, Devin Breland, Carroll Martin, and Caitlin Rituno make the best of their senior year by goofing around with Freddie the Cougar. Freddie made his rounds at the senior tailgate posing with many of the seniors.