

Competition-[kom-pi-tish-uhn]

-the act of competing; rivalry for supremacy

The Student Council and NHS teams entered the building to erupting cheers from the students. Each team hoped to win to get their chance at playing and possibly beating the staff. NHS won last year against Student Council, but couldn't pull out a win against the staff. This year they hoped for a rematch against the staff. Unknowingly for NHS the tides had turned against their favor. Student Council beat the NHS team and went on to play and beat the staff. They pulled together as a team in their strikingly orange matching team shirts and racked up the points against both teams. Stewart Bailey, junior, expressed that his favorite play was when he "got six points for serving the ball in." This game was not only played to create healthy competition, the ticket sales were also given out to a charity. "It felt good to help people," Anthony Singleton, senior, pointed out.
