

my published story

Journalism Adviser Mrs. Cable and senior yearbook editor Emily Hiott edit spreads for the upcoming deadline.

"Journalism helped me to come out of my shell and meet new people. It has helped me to grow into who I am today." Emily contributed to the yearbook for four years.

Sophomore Emily Eaves works on a story while in class. "Journalism has helped me express my ideas through writing," said Emily.

"Being a part of the yearbook staff has helped me to come out of my shell and taught me how to approach people," says sophomore Mary Reeves Simmons as she and senior Leon Williams work together on graphic design.

Sophomore staff writer William Hayes puts his final touches on his article for the BluePrint. "Journalism is an excellent precursor to collegiate level courses and is very fun and interactive," said William.

Juniors Taylor Shuman and Amelia White make an over-the-phone interview to an ad client. "My skills in communication have improved, and I've learned how to express my thoughts through writing," explained Taylor.

"Yearbook is a great way to get involved, represent your school, and make lifelong friends." -senior Tori Sineath