

"At first, I came for the pizza. Then, I came to write poems." -Junior Becca Ann Hoff

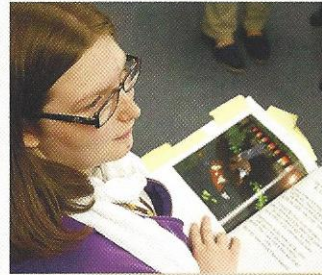

Poetry & Pizza

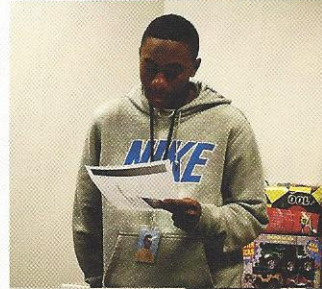

member confessions

WHAT MADE YOU JOIN POETRY AND PIZZA?

Poetry and Pizza was not only one of the longest running clubs at this school, but also one of the most well-known organizations. It consisted of a group of people who congregated the second Friday of each month in order to swap pizza and original poems. Some attended the Poetry and Pizza meetings to socialize and meet with people who possess similar interests, even if they do not share any classes. It was a way for these artistic writers to present what they have written in front of people, having no fear of rejection. Everyone was there for support and also to show the hidden, creative side of high school life. The poets wrote their own stories down every day using the skills they learned in their English classes. After months of writing, they put all their best poems together in a book. It could be called a book of poems, a book of their lives coming together, or a book of expression and individual meanings. Everyone has their own way of showing their thoughts and feelings, and this is how these students chose to show theirs.

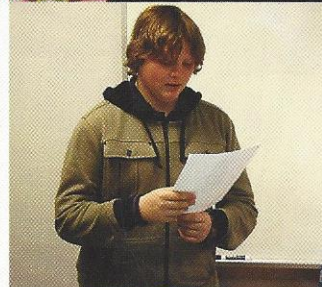

"Poetry and Pizza is a good club to join as a way to express yourself with the social group and reading poems."
-Junior Athena Kisner

"I joined Poetry and Pizza because I like to write poems."
-Sophomore Tiger Barnes

"I like writing poems. I've never really shared them, though."
-Sophomore Leondra Capers

"I've always liked poetry, and my friend said she would join it if I joined."
-Freshman Seth Hyer

"My love for poetry made me join Poetry and Pizza."
-Senior Kimberly Player

