

Members of the band anxiously wait on the sidelines of the field during the awards ceremony. They are all ears to hear their placement at the end of competition, deeply reflecting upon their performance. The still and quiet air creates a sense of mystery and excitement.

Photo by: Deana Arabis

Called to attention, the band is set and ready to take the streets for the parade. With feet together, plumes straight, and instruments set, they are prepared to make their way by the crowds. Navy, blue, silver, and white; a community classic.

Photo by: Eric Bjork

low

Photo by: The Press and Standard

The band works diligently in the summertime during band camp to finish learning their marching show. Ready for some shade and a water break, members are prioritizing their time so things will go quickly. Practice makes perfect.

At the end of their performance, woodwind players spin cubes that match props in the back of the field. These cubes were carried by different instrumentalists to make different formations. An effect is created that is really, "out of the box".

The well-known Colleton County High School Band of Blue makes their way down Main Street. They often practice to be in sync and at attention. With an entrancing banner, horns high, drums beating, and rifles set, the band carries a presence down the road.