

Around the middle of the performance, the colorguard broke out into a circle. A rifle was paired with a flag, and they continued their work as they waltzed around the floor. It took the girls many hours to learn and perfect the dance movements, but eventually it became second nature to them.

Senior Nadia Bowlin is captain of the team. At the end of the show, she had a solo that cut through the center of the figure on the floor. She tossed her flag and fell down to catch it in just a matter of seconds.

At the end of the flag feature, the girls formed an infinity symbol. They danced a couple graceful moves, to then slide into the floor to conclude their performance.

As part of the band, the colorguard took pride in marching across the football field. The colorguard practiced day after day to learn their drill moves and the work that went with it.

Freshman Deanna Monroe executes a chop toss in the fall marching show. She has been in colorguard since middle school, "guard is my passion. You have to be dedicated to it. You can't just go through the motions."
