

Student Council

Student Council depends on the combined effort of each class of students. Without participation from all classes, the student council's initiatives and events would not be as successful as they always are.

1. Freshman class, 2. Sophomore class, 3. Junior class, 4. Senior class

Students who find themselves on the student council at CCHS not only gain a networking tool but also a family. Student council members help build our school and reach out to our community. Organizing and running canned food drives, volunteering at the animal shelter, special olympics and relay for life, creating and distributing goodie bags for staff, being the heart of the student sections at sporting events, and implementing spirit week are just a few examples of all that student council has done throughout the school year. New and returning members of student council know all too well that they are a part of the loving and accepting family that makes up the CCHS Student Council.

Student body president, senior Teagan Crosby, initially joined student council in hopes of getting to know people better. When asked what sparked her interest in running for a presidential position, Teagan shared that she saw the need for a qualified president and she ran for it.

Senior class president, Elizabeth Frank, wanted to be a part of student council whenever she saw how it looked like a family and how fun it is to be a part of. When it came time to sign up for elections, Elizabeth realized she was best for the position.

Junior class president, Ciara Wallace, joined student council to improve her own leadership skills and because she loves a challenge. When deciding whether or not to run for office, Ciara decided she wanted to represent her class.

Sophomore class president, Carlyle Griffin, joined student council with the intent of becoming a leader. She wanted to become president to improve her class and push them to be better.
