

Teacher Cadet seniors are always busy making projects and presentations to get themselves ready for the work force. It's important to learn the different ways of teaching before they go off to become teacher aides.

1. Megan Mitchell; 2. Tyrekia Brown; 3. Brandie Bright; 4. Victoria Dalton and Kayla Ginn; 5. Chelsey McMillan and Zaria Gantt; 6. Ayanna Taylor

Teacher Cadet

Teacher Cadet is a semester long non-traditional class that is offered to seniors who want to pursue a career in education, child development, or coaching. After weeks of studying about the learning process and different types of education, the students get to travel to other schools in Colleton County, some being Forest Hills Elementary, Cottageville Elementary, Northside Elementary, and Black Street Elementary. While there, the students become teacher aides for five weeks. During those five weeks, the aspiring teachers will come to see how it feels to be in the field.

Seniors Teagan Crosby and Canyon Crosby begin to color after a presentation about shapes. They stated, "practicing teaching the lessons helps everyone gain a better understanding of what we're required to do in the classrooms."

Senior Banyon Young helps his classmate show off their science experiment. He said, "we do a lot of hands on projects in this class, and all of them are a lot of fun."