

ART

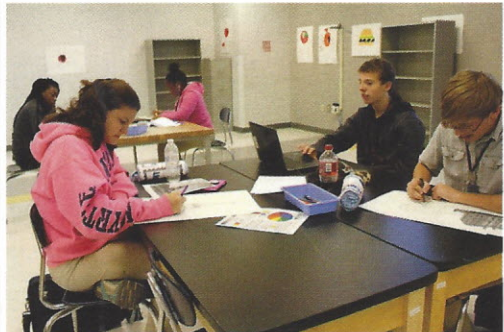

Art is used in many different ways; an outlet for creativity, a way to express one's emotions, or a device for developing and learning skills. Art is everywhere, and here at Colleton County High School it is taught by teachers Sally Davis, Heather Whitten, and Jeannie Langston. Many art classes are given at CCHS, giving students the opportunity to hone their skills and experiment with different kinds of art making such as classes tackling basic art skills, 3D art, and photography. These classes continue to provide knowledge and encourage students to create pieces to share with the community.

(Above) Jadaya Hugie (10) and Tykara Brown (11), of Mrs. Davis's class, work hard on laying down base colors for their "Trash to Treasure" 3-D art pieces. Mrs. Davis, as an Art teacher as well as the Art department head, has one Michelangelo quote she wills Art students to live by, "The greatest danger for most of us not that we aim too high and miss it, but that we aim too low and reach it."
