FFA class went to Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College for a tour and introduction to their programs. Victoria Myers (11) says, "I loved going on this trip. This trip helped me finally decide where I want to go to college."

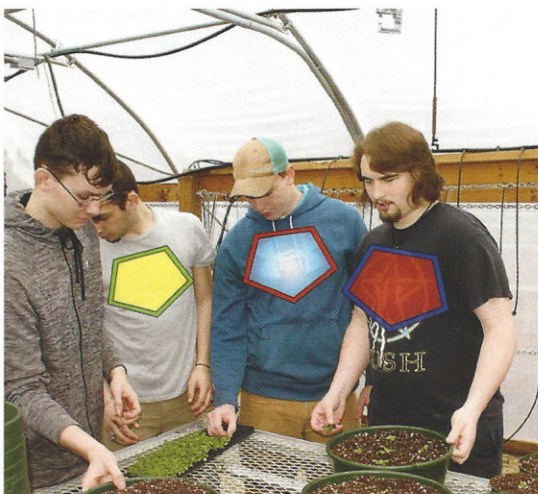

Colleton County High School's Future Farmers of America (known as just FFA) is a youth organization within the education setting that prepares students for leadership roles, personal growth, and career success. FFA was founded in 1928, and it is easy to become a member at CCHS: All a student needs to do is enroll in one of the agricultural courses at TCTC. Being a member of this program gives you endless opportunities from the local, state, and national levels of FFA, including millions of dollars in college scholarships.

"FFA has given me the opportunity to explore what I want to do in the future FFA is tons of fun and everyone there is supportive I honestly love it." -Savannah Hughes (11).

Junior Damontre Ferguson drives the obstacle course trying to be put on the list for best tractor drivers.

L to R: Joshua Stalling (12), Jim Lane (12), Hunter Preston (12) and Hunter Burleson (11) enjoy a nice day in the greenhouse planting flowers and learning how to grow crops.

Senior Julia Cottingham says, "FFA, to me, is helping out the overall society by growing and producing healthy goods while helping animals at the same time."

Demonstrating how she actively helps animals, Julia is refilling the rabbit feeder with grass. Feeding and caring for the animals are one of FFA's many responsibilities.
