

Life Of A Lefty

Being left-handed can be difficult at times, however, leftys show they can be all right.

I like being left-handed because it makes you a little different from everyone else.

A southpaw. A lefty. Most people don't think about being left-handed or right-handed. It's not really important. Is it?

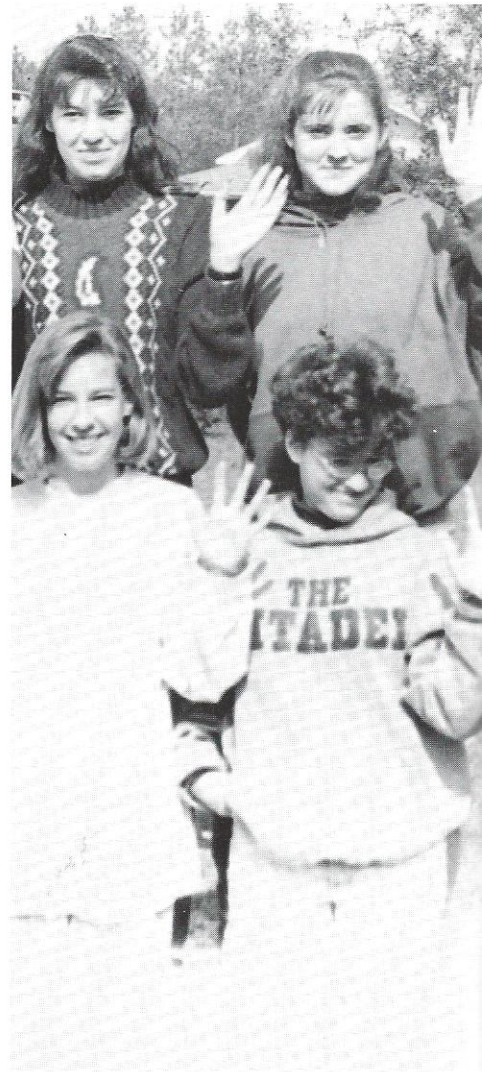

It is to a left-handed person. For them, it's almost impossible to write or cut something without special scissors and notebooks. Left-handed students also find it difficult to write while sitting in the right-handed desks. This is why some high-school students prefer the desks in Mrs. Griffith's room that have a separate desk top and chair.

Although being left-handed makes life a little less convenient, lefties never complain. They know that they are special and they enjoy being a little different!

Wendy Henderson, a seventh grader who is left-handed, concentrates on an assignment.

Mrs. Tabor writes an example on the board for her class. Mrs. Tabor, a middle school English teacher, is one of the few left-handed teachers at Colleton Prep.
